South Australian Population Health Survey – Indigenous Respondents

Aboriginal & Torres Strait Islanders living in South Australia

a leading market research agency in Australia founded on 80 years of market and social research heritage.”*

McNair yellowSquares, the national market and social research company, conduct the South Australian Population Health Survey.

A significant component of this research is to ensure that we speak to a large proportion of Aboriginal people in South Australia.

We specifically need to interview people who are Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islanders, living in South Australia, to complete our survey.

The research can be completed by telephone or online. Each survey takes about 15–20 minutes to complete. All Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders who complete the survey will receive a gift of $20, in appreciation of their time.

The survey will ask questions about the participant's health, the services they use, behaviour that may influence health, like physical activity, and other questions about them and their community.

We're talking to many people across South Australia, from all sorts of backgrounds, ranging from 18 years old to parents and adults. Personal details will not be recorded, or attached to survey responses. All responses will remain anonymous and will be used solely for research purposes.
